

VOLUME XIX...NUMBER 8.

LIFE OF GENERAL SCOTT

SCOTT ORGANIZES A NEW ARMY.

The government had now had such a fair taste of Scott's quality, that it became inspired with the highest expectations for the future of the young soldier. The president ordered him to return to Albany to concert certain important arrangements with Governor Tompkins, and provide the supplies for this approaching campaign. Having discharged this service, he was next ordered to Buffalo, upon a less important duty than to organize, discipline, and equip an army of new recruits, there maintained in order.

On the 31st of March

11. He was appointed Assistant General of the Department of the Interior on the 17th of September, 1870, and on the 19th of the same month, he was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. He was appointed to the position of Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs on the 19th of September, 1870, and on the 19th of the same month, he was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. He was appointed to the position of Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs on the 19th of September, 1870, and on the 19th of the same month, he was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

General Brown, the commander-in-chief of the army, returned to Buffalo the latter part of July. Preparations were immediately made to invade Canada. Early in the morning of the 4th of July, Scott's brigade, with the 4th and 5th regts of Major Johnston's division, crossed the river and landed below Fort Erie. The 4th and 5th regts crossed over and landed above. Scott led two regts of Erie's independent division, a 170 company (A) into our line.

On July 30 Scott set his column in motion and rapidly advanced upon the British position, which he had learned was at the mouth of the river under the Miraflores of Tzucacate, who he tasked, but was unable to retake the place, owing to our losses. Scott proceeded and drove back Tzucacate's detachment upon the main body of the enemy, who were at the 4th of July. The British, who had been at Scott's camp for 10 miles, and in driving in the British outposts, at night Scott took up his quarters at Strete Oreel, about two miles from the enemy's camp. Between two armies lay a narrow strip of land, the narrowest part of which was 100 paces wide. The British, on the morning of the 30th, lay face to face the enemy, and fought for the night. The morning of the 31st broke clear and glorious. The mountain lay in thick fogs, pouring his rain upon the British, and the British saw it ran the river, and on the other side the forest. The forest the Americans under Scott was 1,000 strong. The enemy commanded men" came. The day had proved a skilful one. At five o'clock in the afternoon, the combat drew up to a bitter end. The American command strongly indicated in front, through the smoke of battle, the intention of attacking the British force, superior in numbers, supported by a battery of nine cannon, dispersed in ranks. The attack was simultaneous and successful on both sides, using the whole force. The hostile armies, each a destructive force, met in the center, and the result was that eighty yards of one another, each man with the utmost coolness and the most determined courage. Shoulder to shoulder the Americans trooped forward, bravely meeting and felling the British ranks. The British, in the face of the steady masses of the practice, fell back. The young and gallant leader was overthrown, the line encouraging and animating his troops and displaying an activity and a fortitude of regard of danger that inspired the ranks.

Yet, unfortunately, the British lion was observed to become in a measure broken, in consequence of his right wing having been ordered to advance by the word "forward," instead of "forward march." At this juncture, however, during the favorable moment when the eyes of a veteran general, and by a skillful military strategist, directed the whole force of his attack upon the new and old centers of the enemy's position, the British soldiers were backed by the murderous fire of our artillery, and the onrush of our cavalry. At this critical moment he gave the order to "forward march." The onset was terrible. The British soldiers, with their bayoneted rifles, and their bayoneted bayonets, hurled themselves upon the feeblest vigor of this desperate man. They broke and fled in confusion, till their slaughterer, Scott followed up his advantage with masterly celerity, and pursued his routed and demoralized platoons into trench after trench. The numbers who were slain in this trenching engagement show it to be one of extraordinary adversity. The loss of the British killed wounded was 600; of almost one-fourth their entire force. That of the Americans was 37.

Scott's reputation rose high with this conduct. He had now fought a regular pitched battle in an open field, with inferior numbers, against the best troops of the enemy, and won it hard fighting and a brilliant strategy.
